This technique is suitable for young trees, from one-year-old until their formative pruning is completed after about four to five years. Most trees sold in garden centres will already be at least partially trained. One-year-old trees are called 'maidens' and are sold as feathered or un-feathered.

Trees: formative pruning / RHS Gardening

Correct formative pruning of young trees creates an attractive specimen, with a balanced branch system, that is easy to manage and has a long and productive life. This pruning form can also be used for training half-standard and standard apple trees, the crown simply being developed on a taller clear trunk - about 1.2-1.5m (4-5ft) for half-standard and 1.8-2.1m (6-7ft) for standard - than the normal bush tree.
