Mendel as the Father of Genetics :: DNA from the Beginning

LINKS. DNA was discovered as a major chemical of the nucleus at about the same time Mendel and Darwin published their work. However, during the early 1900s, proteins were considered better candidates as molecules able to transmit large amounts of hereditary information from generation to generation. Although DNA was known to be a very large molecule, it seemed likely that its four chemical components were assembled in a monotonous pattern — like a synthetic polymer.
