This instructable shows how to build a fairly simple water pump that needs no energy input other than water flowing from a higher point to a lower point. Most of the pump is constructed from PVC, with a couple of bronze pieces thrown in for flavor. I was able to source all of the parts from a local hardware store (Lowe's) for a bit under $100.

Hydraulic Ram Pump : 10 Steps (with Pictures) - Instructables

The basic idea behind a ram pump is simple. The pump uses the momentum of a relatively large amount of moving water to pump a relatively small amount of water uphill. To use a ram pump, you must have a source of water situated above the pump. For example, you must have a pond on a hillside so that you can locate the pump below the pond.

How does a hydraulic ram pump work? | HowStuffWorks

A hydraulic ram, or hydram, is a cyclic water pump powered by hydropower. It takes in water at one "hydraulic head" and flow rate, and outputs water at a higher hydraulic head and lower flow rate. The device uses the water hammer effect to develop pressure that allows a portion of the input water that powers the pump to be lifted to a point higher than where the water originally started. The hydraulic ram is sometimes used in remote areas, where there is both a source of low-head hydropower and

Hydraulic ram - Wikipedia

1* A Description The automatic hydraulic ram is used for pumping water. It works by pumping a small fraction of the water that flows through it from a supply source, to a level that can be much higher than the source. The ram can only be used in places where there is a steady and reliable supply of water, with a fall sufficient to operate the ram.
