The Psychology of Interrogation and Confession.

Interrogation rooms remain some of the most secretive locations in the United States legal system. Police undertake interrogation to discover the truth about a crime. Police, along with society at large, want guilty people to confess and innocent people to resist. The stakes are particularly high because a confession is even more powerful than eyewitness testimony in a criminal trial (Kassin & Gudjonsson, 2004).

Interrogation and Confession (Psychology and Law ...

In light of research showing that police are prone to misjudge truthful suspects as deceptive, that innocent people are prone to waive their Miranda rights, and that interrogators are trained to use highly scripted psychological techniques to elicit confessions, it is important to know whether interrogations are discriminating, or diagnostic, in their effects, drawing confessions only from perpetrators of crime, or whether they also elicit confessions from innocent people. As no one knows ...
