Permanence for children in care - Ofsted: developments in ...

There is no hierarchy of permanence options; what matters is the welfare and wellbeing of each child, and finding the right home and family for them. Adoption is probably the most well-known form of permanence in the UK. When a child is adopted, their new parents take on full parental responsibility for their care as their legal guardian.

What is permanence?

The objective of planning for permanence is to ensure that children have a secure, stable and loving family to support them through childhood and beyond, and to give them a sense of security, continuity, commitment, identity and belonging.

6.1.2 Permanency Planning for Children in Care - Guidance

Long-term fostering placements made as part of a permanency planning process need to have a distinct status and be formally confirmed. Where a child is in a fostering placement, the child's foster carers should be entitled to apply to be assessed if it is decided that long-term foster care is in the child's best interests.

Long-term foster care and permanence

The Family Finding model, developed by Kevin A. Campbell, offers methods and strategies to locate and engage relatives of children currently living in out-of-home care. The goal of Family Finding is to connect each child with a family, so that every child may benefit from the lifelong connections that only a family provides. Core beliefs inherent in this approach are:

Loneliness causes suffering for children in foster care, as they lose contact with family members over time and with multiple placement moves. Even the best treatment modalities will not remedy emotional and behavioral difficulties when children are suffering from loneliness. Connection is a prerequisite to healing.

Evaluating Family Finding - Child Trends

In most circumstances, children can be reunited with their families, but in some cases children find homes with relatives or adoptive families. When helping children and families achieve permanency, child welfare professionals must balance an array of issues, including needs of the child and the family, as well as legal requirements.

This Insight, written by Dr Claire Baker, Senior Policy Manager, National Care Advisory Service (part of Catch22), examines permanence and stability for disabled looked after children. It was completed in partnership with the Looked After Children Strategic Implementation Group.

Permanence and stability for disabled looked after children

Permanency decisions for children who come into care should not be delayed based on the legal status of the child or young person. If a child is subject to an Interim Care Order, the decision will be governed through the Court process and the views of the Guardian. In such situations, a parallel planning process may be necessary.
