Instead of analyzing means, variances and covariances of scale scores as in the common variable-centered approach, the person-centered approach analyzes persons or objects grouped according to their characteristic patterns or configurations in contingency tables. The main focus of the book will be on Configural Frequency Analysis (CFA; Lienert and Krauth, 1975) which is a statistical method that looks for over and under-frequented cells or patterns.

Person-Centered Methods - Configural Frequency Analysis ...

Abstract. Configural frequency analysis and log-linear modeling are presented as person-centered analytic approaches for the analysis of categorical or categorized data in multi-way contingency tables. Person-centered developmental psychology, based on the holistic interactionistic perspective of the Stockholm working group around David Magnusson and Lars Bergman, is briefly revisited.

This second edition explores the relationship between two statistical methods: log-linear modeling (LLM) and configural frequency analysis (CFA). Both methods compare expected frequencies with observed frequencies. However, while LLM searches for the underlying dependencies of the involved variables in the data (model-fitting), CFA examines significant residuals in non-fitting models.

Person-Centered Methods | Bookshare

Because the goal of non-typological methods closely relates to the central goal of the “typical” person-centered approaches (i.e., moving the focus away from studying relations between variables to studying relations between people on the study variables), we will include two of such methods in our overview (i.e., configural frequency analysis and Davison and Davenport's (2002) criterion-based method).
