The Renaissance changed the world in just about every way one could think of. It had a kind of snowball effect: each new intellectual advance paved the way for further advancements.

The Renaissance - why it changed the world

The marriage constituted a decision about the relationship of each person with God. For some scholars of the time, marriage represented an obstacle to the achievement of wisdom and spiritual fulfillment. However, in the fifteenth century, during the rise of the Renaissance, marriage was presented to society as an ideal.
