Christianity in India: A Promised Land for Dalits?

Dalits: Mass movement to Christianity However the unexpected and dramatic part of the story is that in the 1860's and 1870's these same missions that had been almost static or even declined in numbers, began to grow at a rapid rate through mass conversions from depressed castes.

Baldaeus Theological College - Articles - Bishop Wilson ...

The mass movements made protestant missionaries to have contact with dalits in many towns and villages, and there is no evidence that they took efforts to foster mass movements among them. It was the dalits, who took initiative in launching the mass movement which challenged the assumptions upon missionaries' labor for decades. [12]

Zeal for History

The radicalization of a humiliated Dalit priesthood generated novel forms of social action, protest, cultural and theological innovation that have also made an important contribution to secular Dalit movements and politics. Protestant Christian centres have been especially prominent in cultural and theological work, but being relatively less caste-divided and Dalit-excluding (because overwhelmingly Dalit in composition), Protestants did not produce the kinds of mass-based social action that ...
