Love is quite literally, both physically and nonphysically, the opposite of the fear/stress response. Our bodies were designed to live in love, not fear. Living in fear, quite frankly, is a malfunction.. Fear triggers your stress response and a fear frequency is sent from your memory banks to the hypothalamus in the brain, which turns the stress switch on. This stress response, or fight or flight mode, is only supposed to happen if our life is in imminent mortal danger.

Fear vs. Love: The Choice Is Yours - GoodTherapy.org ...

Fear and love are the two most powerful motivators of human behavior. Fear is a negative reinforcement while love is a positive reinforcement. In other words, when we're afraid we actively try to avoid or eradicate the source of our fear in order to diminish our painful, unwanted thoughts and feelings. When we love we actively try to engage with or advance the source of our love in order to strengthen our pleasant, wanted thoughts and feelings.

Paulo Freire, a Brazilian expert on education says: "The opposite of love is not, as we many times or almost always think, hatred, but the fear to love, and fear to love is the fear of being free." Love softens you, fear hardens you. Love opens the universe, fear isolates you in yourself. Why are we afraid to love? "Fear is the most difficult emotion to handle. You cry the pain, you scream the anger, but fear is docked silently in your heart."-David Fischman-Love is always a risk ...
