Cavanaugh digs under the "myth of religious violence" and the assumptions made by critics of religion and exposes many of the flaws in their thinking. The chief concern is how we define religion. From Cavanaugh's point of view, the line between religious and secular life is more indistinct than most people believe.

The Myth of Religious Violence: Secular Ideology and the ...

Abstract. The myth of religious violence is the pervasive secularist idea that there is something called "religion," endemic to all human cultures and eras, that has a tendency to promote violence because it is essentially prone to absolutism, divisiveness, and irrationality. Religion must therefore be separated from "secular" phenomena like politics for the sake of peace.

Myth of Religious Violence: Secular Ideology and the Roots ...

The Myth of Religious Violence. One of the enduring myths of the secular state is that religion is so dangerous, so volatile, so likely to burst into conflagrations of violence, that the only protection we have from societal destruction is the erection of a wall that separates religion from the state. We've all heard the story, and in fact, having also heard endless tales of horror about the great religious wars—especially the French Wars of Religion and the Thirty Years War—we might be ...

The myth of religious violence justifies the removal of religion, and it is through that very removal that the state achieves secularization. This can be seen, argues Cavanaugh, in the landmark Supreme Court case Everson v.

The Myth of Religious Violence

In his introduction, Cavanaugh defines the myth of religious violence as “the idea that religion is a transhistorical and transcultural feature of human life, essentially distinct from ‘secular’ features such as politics and economics, which has a peculiarly dangerous inclination to promote violence” (3).

The Myth of Religious Violence: Secular Ideology and the ...

Cavanaugh’s text is a carefully researched and wide-ranging exploration of the these-days apparently presupposed thesis that ‘religion is the source of violence’. This, though, is a tautology, Cavanaugh informs us; if that which causes violence is religion, then it must follow that religion is the source of violence.
