'READING CRITICAL essays about critical essayists', Collini warns us in the introduction to his new volume, 'is not everyone's idea of a good time', and it is true that during the first quarter of this collection which reviews recent biographies of a range of twentieth-century 'men' of letters including Cyril Connolly, V. S. Pritchett, George Orwell, Stephen Spender, and Rebecca West, the reader's experience is not likely to be memorable for its entertain- ment value.
