At the end of the day, the architecture

handwriting debate seems to be a fruitless effort—just another battle in the war between progress and tradition. “Romantic students keep the handwriting around, but not by professional demand,” says Wesselschmidt. “I even had a professor that wouldn’t allow us to hand mark on our drawings.

What's the Deal With Architect Handwriting? - Ceros Originals

Practicing this lettering is still a necessary part of the curriculum in most architecture and design education, because it is still a necessary part of the job. Bad handwriting tends to make any design look amateur. All handwriting should match the quality of the design. Practice is necessary to develop the skills needed to letter legibly.

Architectural Handwriting Practice

Architects and engineers are trained to print by hand neatly.

Just like architectural drawings, hand lettering should be clear and legible. Even with digital notation and labeling, the practice of learning to print concisely is still a measure of making an impressionable mark on paper.
